A lesson from the Crab Grass and the Starburst Ice plant

Eradicate weeds at the root gently and frequently!

This ice plant was a victim of crab grass, a persistent and common weed with shoots that plunge new roots as they creep towards and integrate into flowers. I hunted within the plant for the roots and gently pulled, trying not to rip out too much of the flower. For now, the flower and rest of the garden is safer, but unless precautions are taken, the crab grass will sneak back in. If left unattended, will overtake the entire garden.
